Vegas will have a Silent Night, Zombie Night

Sin City is suddenly becoming a genre town. The Blacklist Film Festival brought their indie flavor to Las Vegas; "Live Evil" hit the Sci-Fi Center; and the Fangoria Trinity of Terrors took over The Palms.

Now Williams Powell's comic shop and grindhouse theater hosts the Las Vegas premiere of Sean Cain's, "Silent Night, Zombie Night" (which we last covered here). The event, celebrating independent cinema, Christmas and zombies all in one night, takes place December 5th at 8 p.m. and costs $5.

Cain, who Fangoria calls a 'Indie Horror Specialist,' will be on hand for a Q&A and autograph signing session after the film, as will producer Wes Laurie, and co-stars Chris Gabriel ("One Long Day," "Devotion," "S4"). Chad Clinton Freeman ("Killer Biker Chicks"), Luke Y. Thompson ("Wicked Lake," "Mad Cowgirl") and Sean Decker ("Alluvial"). Dread Central's Heather Wixson, aka The Horror Chick, will be hosting the event.

The Christmas horror film centers around a viral outbreak turning the citizens of Los Angeles into the feral undead. On the brink of breaking up with both his wife and partner, L.A.P.D. officer Frank Talbot finds himself trapped in an apartment with them both. As death closes in they try not only to survive, but work around the fact both men love the same woman.

The film stars Jack Forcinito, Andy Hopper, Nadine Stenovitch, Felissa Rose ("Sleepaway Camp"), Lew Temple ("The Devil's Rejects," "Trailer Park of Terror") and Vernon Wells ("Mad Max 2: The Road Warrior").
